

CITY PRIDE:

As a first-year student, I love MCHS

By Sean Callaghan

Published: January 20, 2016

As a first year student at Michigan City High School who is new to the school system, I am glad to have a good transition into this community of people and teachers, helping me to succeed in the future.

At Michigan City, I am proud of our school's size. There's an immense amount of students here that can always be befriended.

Michigan City also has extensive opportunities for learning, with many programs for students on all levels. I am proud of the Academic Honors program.

The Honors College offers Dual Credit, also called Concurrent Enrollment, in which high school students have the chance to earn both high school and college credits.

These courses are taught by high school teachers using high school texts and curricula, during the regular high school day.

Many of these courses are rigorous and fulfill the requirements expected of college students, and every class meets standards established by the partnering college or university.

Students must also meet eligibility standards to qualify for dual credit. This allows students to save a lot of money that would've otherwise been spent in an unneeded way.

The teachers in honors college have the responsibility to teach students very well and credits are awarded for that.

Honors College grows with every new school year, continuously adding new students and new courses to the program.

The Michigan City Advanced Honors program serves a diverse group of students, assisting successful adults in the future. Our academic programs reflect that diversity.

The school promotes academic greatness in study, challenging coursework, and a range of courses that compliments a variety of student interests.

The curriculum is college preparatory, filled with dual credit and Advanced Placement (AP) classes and allows for the individual progression of students' abilities and interests during their stay at MCHS.

A big part of our nature to succeed at Michigan City is the faculty's guidance to the students.

Sean Callaghan is a student at Michigan City High School. City Pride is a regular column produced by MCHS students.